

In the spring of 1815 there is a spate of sensational murders. During a horse show at Baron Fördösy's, Count Karl-Heinz Laubenthal suffers a fatal riding accident. Then, only a few days later, Fördösy is found hanged in his castle in Asparn on the River Zaya. And that is by no means the end of this series of treacherous assassinations. It is not until Chief Police Commissioner Leopold Kasbauer and Count Ado von Niedernfels discover that all the murders have a common goal that they succeed in unmasking the perpetrator.

→ Ingenious murders, high society and haute cuisine from the Biedermeier era
